ART MUSEUM SHOWS
CHILDREN'S WORKS

A continuous exhibit of art work, executed by young people, aged six to 18 who attend or have attended classes at The Cleveland Museum of Art, is currently on display in the Museum's South corridor.

The work includes drawings, water colors, and prints. It is based on inspiration derived from the Museum collection and is a result of projects conducted in the free gallery, bus group, outdoor, beginning special and advanced special classes.

New displays, many accompanied by descriptive information on the purpose, development, and accomplishment of the undertaking, occur about once every month; at the moment the projects of the summer classes dominate the corridor. Also of interest is a pictorial narrative, done by seven-year-olds, illustrating the activities of a pupil in a Museum class.
